In this article, we will explore the origins, structure, contributions, and legacy of the American Expeditionary Force (AEF), providing a comprehensive understanding of its importance in U.S. history.

Origins of the American Expeditionary Force

The formation of the American Expeditionary Force can be traced back to the United States' entry into World War I in April 1917. The U.S. had remained neutral for the first three years of the conflict, but several factors led to a change in this stance:

- Unrestricted Submarine Warfare: Germany's policy of attacking merchant ships without warning was a significant provocation.
- The Zimmermann Telegram: A secret communication from Germany to Mexico proposing an alliance against the U.S. stirred public sentiment in favor of war.
- Economic Interests: American banks and businesses had strong financial ties to the Allies, which influenced the decision to join the war.

In response to these provocations and the mounting pressure to support the Allies, President Woodrow Wilson asked Congress to declare war on Germany on April 2, 1917. Shortly thereafter, the need for a dedicated American military force became evident.

Structure of the American Expeditionary Force

The AEF was organized as a separate command within the Allied forces. It was unique in that it operated independently from the British and French militaries, although it worked closely with them. The structure of the AEF included:
