Background of Animal House

The writers drew inspiration from their own college experiences at Dartmouth College, where the fraternity culture was both vibrant and chaotic. The film's roots can be traced back to real-life fraternity events and the antics that often accompanied them.

Notably, the screenplay was influenced by the burgeoning counterculture of the 1960s, which celebrated freedom and rebellion. The writers infused the script with satire, poking fun at the establishment while highlighting the camaraderie and bonds formed during college years.
