Foundational Concepts in AP Government and Politics Vocabulary

Foundational concepts form the bedrock of ap government and politics vocabulary, providing the essential language needed to describe the structure and function of the U.S. political system. These terms define the principles and theories that underpin American democracy and constitutional governance.

Popular Sovereignty

Popular sovereignty is the principle that the authority of the government is created and sustained by the consent of its people, through their elected representatives. It is a cornerstone of American democracy, emphasizing that political power ultimately resides with the citizens.

Federalism

Federalism refers to the division of power between a central national government and smaller political units, such as states. This system allows for shared governance and balances authority to prevent tyranny while accommodating regional differences.

Separation of Powers

Separation of powers is a doctrine that divides government responsibilities into distinct branches—legislative, executive, and judicial—to limit any one branch from exercising the core functions of another. This system promotes checks and balances.

Checks and Balances

Checks and balances are mechanisms that allow each branch of government to amend or veto acts of another branch, preventing any single branch from gaining too much power. This framework ensures accountability and cooperation among branches.

Rule of Law

The rule of law signifies that all individuals and government officials are subject to and accountable under the law. It guarantees fairness and equality, preventing arbitrary governance.

Important Foundational Terms

- Constitution
- Republic
- Popular Consent
- Judicial Review
- Limited Government

Key Political Institutions and Their Vocabulary

Understanding ap government and politics vocabulary requires familiarity with the primary institutions that formulate, enforce, and interpret laws. This section covers terminology associated with Congress, the Presidency, the Supreme Court, and federal bureaucracy.

Congress

Congress is the bicameral legislative body of the United States government, composed of the House of Representatives and the Senate. It holds the power to make laws, control government spending, and oversee other branches.

Legislation

Legislation refers to laws proposed, enacted, or repealed by Congress. Bills undergo a rigorous process involving committees, debates, and voting before becoming law.

Executive Order

An executive order is a directive issued by the President that manages operations of the federal government. While it has the force of law, it is subject to judicial review and legislative override.

Judicial Review

Judicial review is the power of courts, especially the Supreme Court, to examine laws and executive actions to ensure they comply with the Constitution. This authority acts as a check on legislative and executive powers.

Federal Bureaucracy

The federal bureaucracy consists of government agencies and departments responsible for implementing and administering federal laws and programs. Bureaucrats play a critical role in policy execution and regulation.
