Overview of AR 600-8-10

AR 600-8-10, titled "Leaves and Passes," is a United States Army regulation that sets forth the policies and procedures for managing leaves and passes granted to military personnel. This regulation ensures uniformity and fairness in granting time off, whether for personal, medical, or emergency reasons. It defines the authority of commanders in approving leaves and passes and establishes the types of leave available under various circumstances. AR 600-8-10 also outlines the rights and responsibilities of soldiers, emphasizing the importance of balancing mission readiness with individual welfare.

Purpose and Scope

The primary purpose of AR 600-8-10 is to provide a standardized framework for leave management across the Army. It applies to all active duty soldiers, Reservists, and National Guard members when on active duty orders. The regulation covers all types of leaves, including ordinary leave, emergency leave, convalescent leave, and passes such as regular and special passes. It also stipulates how leave is accounted for, reported, and recorded in official personnel records.

Authority and Responsibility

Commanders at various levels hold the authority to approve leaves and passes, ensuring that approvals align with operational requirements and personnel policies. AR 600-8-10 delegates responsibility to commanders to balance the needs of the Army with the welfare of their soldiers. Additionally, the regulation assigns administrative roles to personnel offices for leave processing and record-keeping.

Types of Leaves and Passes

AR 600-8-10 categorizes leave and pass types to address different needs of soldiers. Understanding these categories is essential for proper application and management.

Leaves

Leaves are periods of authorized absence from duty that generally involve the use of leave days. The common types of leaves include:

- Ordinary Leave: Regular leave granted for personal reasons, vacation, or rest and relaxation.
- Emergency Leave: Leave granted for urgent or unforeseen personal matters such as family emergencies or serious illness.
- Convalescent Leave: Leave granted to soldiers for recovery from illness or injury, without charge to leave balances.
- Excess Leave: Leave taken beyond authorized leave balances, subject to approval and possible disciplinary action.

Passes

Passes are authorized periods away from duty without charge to leave balances. They are generally shorter than leaves and are granted under specific conditions:

- Regular Pass: Up to 4 hours away from duty, usually granted for personal errands or appointments.
- Special Pass: Typically granted up to 72 hours, often over weekends or holidays, without charge to leave.

- Emergency Pass: Granted for urgent situations requiring immediate absence, typically up to 24 hours.

Eligibility and Authorization

The eligibility for leaves and passes under AR 600-8-10 depends on the soldier's duty status, length of service, and the nature of the request. Commanders must ensure that soldiers meet applicable criteria before granting authorization.

Who is Eligible?

Active duty soldiers, Reservists on active orders, and National Guard members activated for federal service are eligible for leaves and passes under this regulation. Eligibility for specific types of leave may vary based on rank, time in service, and medical status.

Command Authority for Approval

Commanders at company level or higher generally possess the authority to approve ordinary leave and passes. Emergency and special leaves may require approval from higher echelons depending on duration and impact on unit readiness. The regulation clearly defines the delegation of approval authority to streamline the leave process while maintaining control.

Application and Approval Process

The process of applying for and approving leaves and passes under AR 600-8-10 is designed to be efficient while ensuring accountability.

Submitting Leave Requests

Soldiers must submit leave requests in writing through their chain of command, typically using the DA Form 31 (Request and Authority for Leave). The request should specify the type of leave or pass, duration, and reason. Timely submission is essential to allow commanders sufficient time to review and approve or disapprove.

Review and Approval Procedures

Commanders review leave requests considering operational requirements, soldier's leave balances, and the justification provided. Approval or disapproval is communicated promptly. In cases of disapproval, commanders provide reasons to the soldier, ensuring transparency.

Record Keeping

All approved leaves and passes must be documented and recorded in the soldier's official leave record to maintain accurate personnel records and facilitate pay adjustments if necessary.

Responsibilities and Limitations

AR 600-8-10 outlines specific responsibilities for both commanders and soldiers, as well as limitations on the use of leaves and passes.

Soldier Responsibilities

Soldiers are responsible for requesting leave or passes in accordance with regulations, returning to duty on time, and maintaining communication with their chain of command during leave if required. Failure to comply can result in disciplinary action.

Command Responsibilities

Commanders must ensure that leave approvals do not compromise unit readiness. They are also responsible for monitoring leave usage to prevent abuse and ensuring compliance with regulatory time limits.

Limitations and Restrictions

Certain types of leave, such as excess leave, carry restrictions and potential consequences. Additionally, during deployments or critical missions, leave and pass privileges may be suspended or limited to maintain mission effectiveness.

Impact on Duty Status and Pay

The granting of leaves and passes under AR 600-8-10 affects a soldier's duty status and entitlements.

Duty Status During Leave and Passes

Soldiers on leave are considered absent from duty but remain in active status, whereas those on passes are generally still considered present for duty purposes. The distinction impacts how time off is recorded and managed.

Pay and Benefits Considerations

Leave is typically charged against a soldier's accrued leave balance, affecting future leave availability and retirement calculations. Passes, being non-chargeable, do not impact leave balances or pay. However, unauthorized absences can result in forfeiture of pay or other administrative actions.

Recent Updates and Amendments

AR 600-8-10 is periodically updated to reflect changes in military policy, technology, and operational needs. Staying informed about amendments is crucial for commanders and soldiers alike.

Recent Changes

Recent revisions have clarified the definitions of emergency leave and passes, expanded the use of electronic leave request systems, and updated procedural timelines to improve efficiency. These changes aim to better accommodate the modern soldier's needs while maintaining regulatory compliance.

Implementation and Training

The Army regularly conducts training and disseminates guidance to ensure that all personnel understand the current provisions of AR 600-8-10. Commanders are encouraged to integrate these updates into their unit's administrative practices.
