Early Life

Walt Disney was born on December 5, 1901, in Chicago, Illinois. His full name was Walter Elias Disney, but everyone called him Walt. He was the fourth of five children in his family. Walt's father, Elias Disney, was a hardworking carpenter, and his mother, Flora Call Disney, was a homemaker.

As a child, Walt was very creative and loved to draw. He enjoyed making sketches of animals and nature. His family moved to a farm in Missouri when he was about 4 years old. There, Walt spent a lot of time drawing and exploring the countryside. He also learned how to care for animals, which later inspired many of his famous characters.

Education and Early Interests

Walt attended McKinley High School in Chicago, where he took art classes and contributed to the school newspaper. He was also interested in photography and joined the school's photography club. After high school, Walt wanted to be an artist, so he enrolled in the Chicago Art Institute.

However, he didn't finish his education there. Instead, he decided to join the army during World War I. Walt was too young to enlist, so he drove an ambulance for the Red Cross in France. This experience helped him understand the world better and shaped his future career in storytelling.

The Start of Disney's Career

After the war, Walt returned to the United States and began working for a commercial art studio. He quickly realized that he wanted to create animations. - Donald Duck
- Goofy
- Pluto

Creating the Disney Empire

As Mickey Mouse became more popular, Walt Disney expanded his empire. He created a series of short films featuring Mickey and his friends. Then, in 1937, Walt released his first full-length animated movie called "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." This movie was a huge success and proved that animated films could be both entertaining and profitable.

Following the success of "Snow White," Disney continued to produce many other classic animated films, including:

1. Pinocchio (1940)
2. Dumbo (1941)
3. Bambi (1942)
4. Cinderella (1950)
5. Peter Pan (1953)

These films brought joy to millions of children and families around the world.

Innovations in Animation

For example, he used Technicolor to add vibrant colors to cartoons, making them more visually appealing. He also experimented with special effects and incorporated music into his films, which helped create a magical atmosphere.

Walt was also the first to use a multi-plane camera, which added depth to animated scenes. This technology made the animation look more realistic and engaging. His commitment to quality set high standards for the animation industry.

Disneyland and Theme Parks

In addition to creating animated movies, Walt Disney had a dream of building a theme park where families could have fun together. In 1955, he opened Disneyland in Anaheim, California. This park was unlike anything people had ever seen before. It featured rides, attractions, and characters from Disney films.

Visitors could meet Mickey Mouse, ride on the carousel, and even explore a pirate ship! Disneyland became an instant success, attracting millions of visitors each year.

Walt Disney's vision didn't stop with Disneyland. He wanted to create even more magical experiences. In 1965, he began planning a second park called Walt Disney World in Florida, which would open after his passing.
