The Setting of the World State

The World State is a highly industrialized society where technology controls every aspect of life. Key features include:

One of the central warnings in "Brave New World" is the potential overreach of technological advancements. Huxley presents a future where:

- Reproductive technology eliminates natural conception, leading to a loss of individuality.
- Psychological conditioning shapes desires and behaviors, removing free will.
- Mind-altering substances like "soma" ensure societal compliance and happiness at the expense of genuine emotions.

2. Conformity vs. Individuality
