Spring training serves as the platform for evaluating players' health, form, and readiness for the demanding season ahead. The roster is subject to changes as players compete for spots on the 26-man regular season roster. The team's front office places significant emphasis on balancing experience with youth, ensuring depth across all positions. With several key players returning from injury or offseason upgrades, the roster presents a competitive environment. Additionally, the Cardinals have incorporated players on minor league contracts with invitations to spring training, offering depth and potential surprise contributors. This section provides an overview of the composition and expectations surrounding the 2023 spring roster.

Roster Composition and Player Categories

The Cardinals' spring training roster typically includes players categorized as starters, bench players, bullpen arms, and developmental prospects. The 2023 roster comprises:

- Established veterans expected to hold starting roles
- Emerging players competing for starting or backup positions

- Pitchers aiming to secure bullpen roles or rotation spots
- Top minor league prospects given opportunities to showcase their talents
- Non-roster invitees striving to earn a place on the team

This structure allows the coaching staff to evaluate talent comprehensively and adjust strategies accordingly.

Pitching Staff Breakdown

The pitching staff is a cornerstone of the Cardinals spring training roster 2023, with significant attention on both the starting rotation and bullpen depth. The team has focused on strengthening its pitching corps through offseason acquisitions and player development. The rotation includes a mix of seasoned arms and young pitchers aiming to establish themselves at the major league level. Meanwhile, the bullpen features a variety of relievers, including closers, setup men, and situational pitchers. Spring training provides the opportunity to assess velocity, command, and endurance, as well as bullpen roles for the upcoming season.

Starting Rotation Candidates

The starting rotation candidates for 2023 include key veterans who have demonstrated consistency as well as promising youngsters. Players are evaluated on their ability to maintain effectiveness through multiple innings and their potential to contribute to the team's overall success.

- Adam Wainwright – Experienced veteran expected to anchor the rotation
- Jack Flaherty – Returning from injury, aiming to regain peak form
- Steven Matz – Reliable left-handed starter with solid track record
- Camilo Doval – Emerging talent pushing for rotation consideration
- New acquisitions and minor league standouts competing for remaining spots

Bullpen Depth and Relief Pitchers

The Cardinals' bullpen is a critical component of the spring training roster, with multiple relievers competing for late-inning roles. The coaching staff evaluates pitchers based on their ability to handle high-pressure situations and maintain consistent performance. The mix includes established closers, middle relievers, and lefty specialists.

- Ryan Helsley – Expected closer with strong strikeout ability

- Alex Reyes – High-leverage reliever returning from injury
- Tyler Webb – Left-handed specialist with situational effectiveness
- New arms and non-roster invitees aiming to secure bullpen spots
- Developmental pitchers showing potential for major league roles

Position Players and Key Contributors

The position players on the Cardinals spring training roster 2023 include a mix of proven major leaguers, emerging talents, and prospects. The team's lineup depth is an important aspect of their competitive outlook, with several players vying for starting roles and bench positions. The roster features a balance of power hitters, contact specialists, and defensive standouts. Spring training allows the coaching staff to refine the batting order and defensive alignments, as well as to test players in multiple positions.

Infielders and Catchers

The infield and catching positions on the roster include both returning starters and players competing for playing time. Defensive skills, offensive production, and versatility are key evaluation criteria during spring training.

- Paul Goldschmidt – Veteran first baseman and offensive leader
- Tommy Edman – Utility infielder valued for speed and defense
- Willson Contreras – Primary catcher with power-hitting ability
- Emerging prospects challenging for backup or starting roles
- Defensive specialists providing depth across multiple infield positions

Outfielders and Designated Hitters

The outfield group and designated hitters on the spring training roster are equally important, with a focus on speed, power, and defensive range. The Cardinals aim to establish a balanced lineup with players capable of contributing in multiple facets of the game.

- Harrison Bader – Center fielder known for defensive prowess
- Dylan Carlson – Young outfielder with developing offensive skills
- Brendan Donovan – Versatile player competing for outfield or infield roles

- Veteran role players and prospects adding depth and flexibility
