This article delves into the history of the Dallas Cowboys number 13, exploring the players who have donned it, their achievements, and the significance of this jersey number in the context of the Cowboys' franchise.

Early Years of Number 13

The Dallas Cowboys were established in 1960, and from their inception, jersey numbers have played a crucial role in defining player identities and legacies. The number 13 has been associated with a few key figures in the early history of the franchise.

Don Meredith (1960-1968)

One of the most notable players to wear number 13 for the Cowboys was Don Meredith, who played as a quarterback from 1960 to 1968. Meredith was not only one of the original Cowboys but also a fan favorite and a significant contributor to the team's early success.

- Career Highlights:
- Meredith was known for his strong arm and charismatic personality, which made him a natural leader on the field.
- He led the Cowboys to their first playoff appearance in 1966 and was a three-time Pro Bowler.
- His ability to connect with fans and media helped to elevate the Cowboys' profile during the early years of the franchise.

Meredith's impact on the team extended beyond his playing career. After retiring, he became a well-known broadcaster, further solidifying his place in Cowboys lore. His legacy as a pioneer for the franchise and his connection to number 13 are remembered fondly by fans.

The Evolution of Number 13

After Meredith's departure, the number 13 continued to be worn by various players throughout the years. Each of these players brought their own unique style and contributions to the team, adding to the rich tapestry of the Cowboys' history.

Other Notable Players

- Clint Longley (1974-1976): Longley, a backup quarterback, is best remembered for his incredible performance in a 1974 game against the Washington Redskins when he stepped in for an injured Meredith and led the Cowboys to victory. His performance solidified his place in Cowboys history, despite only wearing the number for a brief time.
- Gary Hogeboom (1980-1983): Hogeboom, who wore number 13 during his tenure with the Cowboys, was another backup quarterback who had moments of significance. He was known for his strong arm and ability to make plays when called upon, helping to keep the Cowboys competitive during his time.
- Jason Garrett (1993-1999): Garrett, who is well-remembered as both a player and a coach for the Cowboys, wore number 13 during his playing days. As a backup quarterback, Garrett was known for his intelligence and work ethic, traits that would later serve him well as a coach. His time with the team contributed to the foundation of what would become a successful coaching career.
