Understanding Disorganized Attachment

Disorganized attachment is a complex attachment style characterized by a lack of clear attachment behavior. Individuals with this style often experience conflicting feelings about close relationships, which can lead to confusion and emotional distress. This attachment pattern usually develops in early childhood when caregivers are simultaneously a source of comfort and fear, often due to trauma, neglect, or inconsistent responses.

Characteristics of Disorganized Attachment

- Emotional dysregulation and anxiety

Understanding these characteristics is crucial for identifying disorganized attachment and beginning the healing process.

Origins and Causes
